

VIVE, MOMENTUM, SOCIAL AFTER DARK in conjunction with BROWNMAN MUSIC INC. proudly presents

Every Saturday
March 2019
Social After Dark

(in the Walper Hotel)

1 King St. West

519-745-8478

$20 | $10 students w ID

www.Miles.Brownman.com

for tickets and info

9:00pm each week

miles.brownman.com

5 Saturdays...
5 Quintets...
5 Eras of Miles...

The 2019 Edition of

FIVE WEEKS FOR MILES

PRODUCED & DIRECTED BY BROWNMAN

PHOTOS BY HOK NG & STEVE STOBER

LOGISTICS BY ANDREW NICHOLSON

PUBLICITY BY BROWNTASAUROS RECORDS

Week 1 - Sat. Mar 2, 2019 "Young Miles" - The Bird Years

At 17 years of age Miles would travel across the river from his home in East St. Louis, Illinois to St. Louis, Missouri to hear well-known jazz musicians play in clubs. Mesmerized by their talent and style, he would listen to their all night jam sessions until Charlie "Bird" Parker arrived in St. Louis with the Billy Eckstine Band in 1944. Bird was the creative force behind a new form of jazz later to be dubbed "bebop" and the young Miles would become fascinated with it's complex melodic and harmonic structure leading Miles to follow Bird across the country until he was allowed to substitute for his trumpet player at the time - Dizzy Gillespie. His tenure as Bird's sideman would most exemplify this hard-swinging period of his life.

Brownman - trumpet Nick Morgan - alto saxophone Adrean Farrugia - piano Jesse Dietschi - upright bass Tyler Goertzen - drums

Week 2 - Sat. Mar 9, 2019 "Birth Of The Cool & Kind Of Blue" - Post-Bop Miles

The term "cool" came to particular prominence in the 1950s to describe a more cerebral, less impassioned way of playing jazz. It's generally supposed that these sessions were part of the inspiration for the 'cool school' of jazz which flourished, particularly on the West Coast, in the 50s. Miles would confound the public's expectations by departing the bop world of Charlie Parker and embracing this new order of jazz as heard on "Birth Of The Cool" (Capitol Records, '50). This 'cooler' form of expression would lead to the modal approaches of "Kind Of Blue" (Columbia, '64) free of fixed harmony and the now legendary collaboration with the then rising tenor saxophone icon John Coltrane.

Brownman - trumpet Matt Lagan - tenor sax Nick Maclean - piano Ross MacIntyre - upright bass Frank Botos - drums

The first set will focus on the "Birth Of The Cool" beginnings of this era... the second set will emphasize the "Kind Of Blue" approaches

Week 3 - Sat. Mar 16, 2019 "Plugged Nickel" - The Shorter Years

Two quintets in particular featuring 2 tenor saxophone giants dominated Miles' musical life almost exclusively from the mid 50's, right up until the 70's, one featuring John Coltrane and the other featuring Wayne Shorter. This period would feature an assortment of quintets and sextets all pushing the boundaries of improvisation within a simple modal framework, but the two teamings that would leave the world breathless would be those of Coltrane and Shorter. Of those two teamings it would be the Miles-Shorter pairing that would result in some of the most explosively creative & exploratory jazz in Miles' history. "Live at the Plugged Nickel" (Columbia / Legacy '65) continues to be a paramount recording in the great Miles lineage and considered by many to be some of the most ground-breaking jazz in history.

Brownman - trumpet Andy Ballantyne - tenor sax Nick Maclean - piano Nick Arseneau - upright bass Norbert Botos - drums

Week 4 - Sat. Mar 23, 2019 "From Bitches Brew to Tutu" - Electric Miles

Legendary as a kind of line in the sand challenging jazz fans during the ascendance of electric, psychedelic rock, "In A Silent Way" (Columbia Records, 1969) hinted at the repetitive polyrhythms Davis would employ throughout the early '70s. It also partook generously of electric piano and bass tonal colourings previously explored in acoustic settings, but "In A Silent Way" and the subsequent "Bitches Brew" and "Live Evil" recordings remains a clearly electric jazz record, part ambient color exploration, part rock-inflected energy and vibe, and part outright maverick creativity. Long, breathy solos would be a feature of this era, glistening against his new groups' strange admixture of musical moods. Miles would stay on this "electric" path right in to the '80's, continually exploring these textures with newer and younger generations of musicians.

Brownman - electric trumpet Dave Riddel - electric guitar Nick Maclean - rhodes Sean Dennis - 6 string electric bass David Steinmetz - drums

The first set tonight will focus on the "Bitches Brew" 70's era... the second set will emphasize the "Tutu" 80's ideologies.

Week 5 - Sat. Mar 30, 2019 "Doo-bop" - Had he lived...

Towards the end of Miles' life he began an exploration of another sub-component of modern popular music - hip-hop. The "Doo-bop" recording (Warner, '92) would feature rappers and loops and would have marked the beginning of Miles' exploration or this artform. It is often harshly referred to by critics as his "worst" documented recording and as a "forgettable" era of his life, but it still stands strongly as a prime example of the Milesian ethic - his ability to recognize "what's next" and creatively move within and extend that artform. Brownman states "I believe it is extremely probable that Miles would have worked closely with the likes of Tribe Called Quest, The Roots, Guru, Rakim, Big Daddy Kane, junglists, DJs, rappers, beat-makers alike... had he lived. Tonight will be a salute to what MIGHT have been."

Brownman - electric trumpet Ayrah Taerb - rapper DJ Dopey - turntables Sean Dennis - electric bass Jacob Aylward - drums

www.Brownman.com
Brownman Music Inc

Long &
McQuade

VIVE
DEVELOPMENT

THE WALPER
HOTEL

